When that occurs, the light has been effectively reflected from the surface of the metal. In Rothermere sold the paper to H. In doing so, the paper supported Herbert Morrison, who co-ordinated Labour's campaign, and recruited his former antagonist Philip Zec to reproduce, on the front page, a popular VE Day cartoon on the morning of the election, suggesting that Labour were the only party who could maintain peace in post-war Britain. In it introduced the Andy Capp cartoon, created by Reg Smythe from Hartlepool, in the northern editions. The Mirror had repeated allegations about the airline's safety from a Channel 4 documentary which were not reflected by its most recent evaluation by the Irish Aviation Authority. The columnist Cassandra "Rated 4 out of 5 by CassandraS from Very shiny metallic look I like that this paper is a thicker cardstock and has a beautiful metallic appearance. The source for this table was The Economist , [35] although it was a hoax. In , the price was increased to one penny. Because of it's ultra smooth not so porous surface I find it difficult to keep the lanterns glued together. The election ended in Britain's first hung parliament since , but Cameron still became prime minister of the country within days as the Conservatives formed a coalition with the Liberal Democrats. The paper changed its masthead logo from red to black and occasionally blue , in an attempt to dissociate itself from the term " red top ", a term for a sensationalist mass-market tabloid. The headline read "How to stop him" in reference to the general election two days later , thus confirming the Daily Mirror's Labour allegiance. Date published: Rated 5 out of 5 by Bobbi from I needed to create giant military "dog tags" for a bulletin board project and the foil paper looked like metal and served the purpose well. On 6 April , the red top came back. For all other uses you need to be careful about how you treat the paper to get the result you want. Labour's credibility was helped by plans including extra NHS funding and moving away from firm commitments on re-nationalisation to reverse the Conservative policy of privatisation, but its decision to be up-front about tax increases was seen as a key factor in its failure to win. It was just what I was looking for. When it failed to win readers, the Sun was sold to Rupert Murdoch " who immediately relaunched it as a more populist and sensationalist tabloid and a direct competitor to the Mirror. Political allegiance[edit] The Daily Mirror has traditionally backed the Labour Party at general elections. The ambitious brief for the supplement, which ran on Wednesdays and Fridays, was to deal with international affairs, politics, industry, science, the arts and business". Despite this, the Daily Mirror remained loyal to Labour and urged its readers to vote for the party now led by Michael Foot , condemning the Thatcher-led Tory government for its "waste of our nation", [40] condemning the rise in unemployment that Thatcher's Conservative government had seen in its first term in power largely due to monetarist economic policies to reduce inflation, although the government's previously low popularity had dramatically improved since the success of the Falklands conflict a year earlier. The claim was part of Anderson's match preview ahead of AC Omonia's game with Manchester City , which appeared in the web and print versions of the Mirror, with the nickname also quoted in subsequent editions on 19 September.
